Education

Like most, I learned everything on my own. In 2020, I started by writing simple websites. Then I took up frameworks (I love Svelte). Now I can write various projects of any complexity.
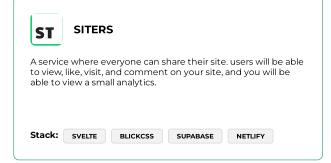

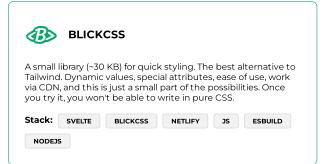

Work experience

I spent a lot of time freelancing, performing tasks of varying complexity, simple as editing styles and complex as a turnkey website. Now I'm looking for a remote full-time job.
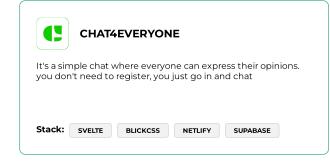

My projects

RAVENCORE

A Discord bot that executes your commands. Add the bot to your server and create a command on the website. Commands are programmed in JavaScript. The site has a nice and user-friendly design.

Stack: SVELTE | BLICKCSS | FIREBASE | VERCEL | DISCORD.JS | LINUX

ITPOINT

An online platform for individual programming lessons. Gain invaluable experience with our teachers. Cheap and interesting lessons, a wide range of topics to learn. You can also analyze a topic separately with our specialist

KINCO

If you're a movie buff and like to keep a list of movies you've watched, you'll find this app useful. You can not only write down the title, but also add the year, genre, and a note about the movie. You can mark a movie as a favorite and note whether you have watched it or want to watch it. There is a sorting function, a change of theme (b/w), and you can turn off animations if you wish.

PIVKO

PIVKO. A simple game where you have to catch beer. There is an avatar in the bottom center that drinks a glass of beer to your health. This game is currently unfinished. I hope to get around to finishing it.

Stack: HTML CSS JS JQUERY

JELLY JUMP

Another simple game similar to Google Dinosaur. The blue square has a very nice jumping animation, as if it were really made of jelly. It's not comfortable to play on a phone at the moment, but it's fine on a computer.
